

Preparing Students for High Demand Clinical Occupations

COE has three very engaged cohorts studying Clinical Medical Assistant and Phlebotomy Technician between our Gallatin campus and our Upper Cumberland region, specifically in Celina. All programs require classroom and laboratory studies, online modules, and clinical externships before students sit for their national certification exams. Following course completion and certification, students became employed at physician practices and hospital laboratories. In addition, some graduates choose to further their education in areas such as nursing, while working in their current certified clinical roles.

We have two additional courses starting in April in Gallatin, with plans to continue offering courses at our Upper Cumberland and Springfield campus locations.

Welcome to the Team!

Stephanie Hynes, Administrative Assistant, joined the Center of Emphasis last fall, providing support to departmental operations. She can be reached at stephanie.hynes@volstate.edu and 615-230-3338.

American Heart Association (AHA) Training Center

COE offers new and renewal courses in Basic and Advanced Life Support and Pediatric Advanced Life Support for health care professionals. In addition, courses in cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) and automated external defibrillator (AED) geared to individuals outside of health care are offered in our Gallatin, Springfield, Cookeville, and Livingston communities. Many of these courses are conducted in partnership with our training center's aligned instructors in those regions. We can conduct classes in one of our classrooms or at your location.
